

Using Haptics in a Public Restroom

A woman exits a public bathroom stall. Her provider is waiting for her outside the stall. The provider uses Haptics to inform the woman, or receiver, of the location of the sink, soap dispenser, paper towels and garbage can. The receiver washes her hands, takes a paper towel, dries her hands and then throws the paper towel away. She then follows the provider's signals to the door and leaves the restroom.